No matter how well teachers are prepared to teach, no matter what accountability measures are put in place, no matter what governing structures are established for schools, educational progress will be profoundly limited if students are not motivated and able to learn. Health-related problems play a major role in limiting the motivation and ability to learn, and interventions to address those problems can improve educational as well as health outcomes.

Healthier students are better learners. Recent research in fields ranging from neurosciences and child development to epidemiology and public health provide compelling evidence for the causal role that educationally relevant health disparities play in the educational achievement gap that plagues students. This is why reducing these health disparities must be a fundamental part of school reform. So let's join hands to contribute in student's health.

We appreciate your interest in student's health programme and joining us in our journey of "Healthy Students Healthy Nation"
